The power of these emotional objects goes back to their own history, and is engraved in their very fibres, far beyond the function I give them. The materialistic culture of perverted forms fears simplicity

The ability to be in touch with reality enables me to react against a universe which has become too virtual for me. I am not tempted by technological feats, by digital and micro processing era, any more than I am by mass production. Each object must provoke not only an emotion, but also a feeling of fulfilment and true sensuality, which makes you immediately feel you want to touch it. No doubt I have suffered from not being caressed enough. Today, I create objects that cry out to be caressed
